From the "Spectator" of New York City we extract as fol-lows:—"The New England Mutual stands forth as a fitting type of what a company should be in regard to its method of business. Seeking rather to establish a reputation or stability and soundness, than to present novel and promising, but untried and unapproved features in underwriting; conducting all the company's affairs with the strictest economy and adopting only those measures proved by experience to be the wisest, the directors of the company have succeeded in establishing for it a reputation for reliability second to no other similar organization in the country. Yet, great as is the degree of caution manifested in the adoption of every new measure, the company is conducted in a manner fully in unison with the progressive spirit of the age As regards its dealings with olicy holders, few companies are more liberal and honest."

"The business of the New England Mutual is conducted in the most economical and able manner; its terms are liberal and just; its success has been uniform and extended and its perfect reliability and safety, the natural consequences attendant upon the possession of such features, and which should be the great desidratum with an insurance company, are in no instance excelled." It is impracticable, and unnecessary. First, because it would involve the expense of maintaining a boat and a boat's crew on shore, say two miles distant from where the steamer would have to lay to, and involve a delay of several hours, without any commensurate result in the shape of "freight and passengers," to counterbalance the loss of time and extra consumption of fuel.—for the fires must be kept up.
